

Euphemia McArthur was born in the village of Auchtermuchty, Scotland, November 18, 1825. Her father, Francis McArthur, as also his father, Francis McArthur, was born in Strath Mingo, Scotland.

She was married to Robert Smart in Edenborough, Scotland, May, 1847 and emigrated to America in 1850, settling in Rock County, Wisconsin, then a frontier community. To her nine children were born, eight of whom survive her.

Her husband died at Ottawa, Kansas, January 4, 1903, and she died at Ottawa, Kansas, March 21, 1915.

character, she met each morning with a smile of hope, with a martyr's fortitude she bore the burden and heat of the day, and the evening twilight found her with a prayer of thankfulness on her lips that strength for the day's duties had been hers. The ruggedness of her native land was fittingly reflected in every fibre of her character, while the gentleness of her daily walks typified the tranquility of its glens. Not given over much to demonstration nor emotion, her love for her family was as deep as it was silent, and when one by one they went from
